Anarchist Bookfair

Saturday 18th October

The London Anarchist Bookfair is the biggest anarchist event in the country but there's a lot more to anarchism than books or bookfairs. Saturday also sees the national TUC organised demonstration in London with a big anarchist presence, showing anarchists are part of all workers struggles. But we don't accept the idea that our problems will be solved for us by Union leaders or politicians. If revolution breaks out in Hyde Park we'll be there. If not the Bookfair is 15 minutes away on the central line.

The week after there is a United Friends and Families Campaigns (UFFC) march – for the hundreds who have died in police custody or at the hands of the police. These cases and the UFFC's resistance remind us again of what state power and policing means for many people. UFFC will be speaking at the Bookfair.

So the Bookfair is a small part of a movement and struggles that become more crucial every year. But it's also a celebration of those fights and a place to set out our stall(s). As always there are books, magazines and newspapers full of ideas and opinions and passion, there will also be dozens of meetings and discussions, films, cabaret and more than anything a chance to meet other people who want to build a new world.

Anarchism doesn't mean no organisation, so there's food, a well run crèche and older kids space and anything we think can make the day more open and accessible.

Crèche Available for children 2-8 years.

Younger children Welcome with carers.

Older children There is a supervised space and a youth space.

AFem 2014

Sunday 19th October

On Sunday at the same venue there will be a international anarcho-feminist conference. AFem 2014 is hopefully the first in a series of international anarcho-feminist conferences. We are class struggle anarchists of varying genders, backgrounds and histories working against capitalism and the state. We have identified a collective need to put feminist issues back at the top of the anarchist agenda, and want to build anarcho-feminism into every aspect of anarchist theory and activity. Get involved and help us shape this event.
